SBA proteges offer insights

129 mentor-proteges approved

The newly-approved proteges in the Small Business Administration's All Small Mentor-Protege program are just getting started--and for many it is a time of enthusiasm and hope.

"It is a good fit," Joe Gelardi, president of Vectrona LLC, told Set-Aside Alert about his company's mentor, Linx Global Solutions. "We know we work well together."

Vectrona, a managing consulting firm in Virginia Beach, VA, is a Small biz group to get day in court vs. DOD subcontracting program

A small-business group will go to trial in December against the Defense Dept. to try to reveal more information about the workings of the DOD's longstanding Comprehensive Subcontracting Plan Test Program.

The American Small Business League, headed by Lloyd Chapman, has been criticizing the program for several years because Chapman contends it has not performed well and has reduced opportunities for small businesses.

Chapman said he has been unable to review crucial documents from the program because of various Freedom of Information Act exemptions that have been applied by DOD officials.

He hopes that the testimony

Trump orders agencies to review and strengthen "Buy American"

President Donald Trump signed a "Buy American" executive order Tuesday ordering federal agencies to review and strengthen policies that promote government contracting with American contractors and employees.

While the order to begin reviews appears to be straightforward, there are uncertainties about how far agencies will go in reducing foreign competition, considering that such competition may be keeping prices lower. There also is uncertainty about how far into the supply chain the order might reach, since many goods are manufactured with parts from all over the world.

The Buy American Act giving U.S. contractors preference in U.S. government contracting has been in force since 1933. A separate law

Trying to avoid a gov't shutdown

At press time, congressional leaders and White House officials were cautiously confident that a spending deal would be reached and a government shutdown avoided.

The government will stop all non-essential operations April 29 unless Congress passes a budget for the remainder of fiscal 2017, or an extension.

President Trump's push for immediate border wall funding ramped up the shutdown risk in recent days. But White House aides at press time said the president would wait until September to ask for wall funds, so the prospect of avoiding shutdown has brightened.

protege on one of the 129 mentor-protege teams that have been approved by SBA since the program was launched in October 2016.

The three protege principals who spoke with Set-Aside Alert all said there was substantial paperwork in the application, but the application process itself was straightforward, with approvals granted within a week or two.

But first, each found a mentor. Gelardi, a former Navy pilot who is now a service-disabled veteran, said he and his mentor met on active duty and have known each other for many years. "Having a strong relationship enables the kind of trust you have to have," he said.

Raphael Warren, also a service-disabled veteran, and president of Spartan Cyber Security in Albuquerque, NM, met the principal of his mentor company, METI Group, through a friend.

Warren formerly was a federal employee, but he is new to federal contracting. Preparing the application for the mentor-protege program was challenging, and he said early in the process he was mistakenly told by a government employee that veterans were not eligible.

But fortunately, an SBA employee online corrected that misinformation and walked him through many of the details of the application. "That assistance was extraordinarily helpful in explaining the nuances," he said.

Virginia Saldivar, an accountant and president of METRO Accounting and Professional Services LLC in Goodyear, AZ, said it took her less than two weeks to draw up the application to the mentor-protege program. She had previously drawn up teaming agreements. Her mentor, Sonoran Technology and Professional Services LLC, is a previous employer.

"I hope to do more contracting and business development, develop relationships and grow my business," Saldivar told Set-Aside Alert about her goals in the program. METRO is an 8(a) firm and an Economically-Disadvantaged Women-Owned Small Business.

IG: OASIS orders may need more competition

The General Services Administration's "OASIS" professional services contract just got a clean audit from the agency's Office of Inspector General, but the IG nonetheless suggested competition could be improved.

The IG said assisted acquisitions personnel complied with price evaluation and negotiation provisions when awarding OASIS task orders. "As such, we do not have reportable audit findings," the April 20 audit stated (<http://goo.gl/yAZYS3>).

However, the IG noted that in seven of the nine OASIS task orders reviewed in the audit, there were fewer than three bids from qualified contractors.

Competition possibly could be increased by requiring contract officers to obtain at least three bids for each task order, giving advance notice and getting feedback from qualified vendors who did not bid, the IG suggested.

The audit also found that the digital files did not contain all the required documents for some task orders.

have been ignored or covered up over the years.

"I'm confident that we will uncover evidence that would force the Pentagon and Congress to dismantle the Pentagon's Comprehensive Subcontracting Plan Test Program," Chapman told Set-Aside Alert in an emailed statement.

Congress set up the DOD subcontracting program in 1989. While the value of the program has been challenged by Chapman and others, Congress last year renewed it for another 10 years.

The program allows large DOD contractors to develop small business subcontracting plans on a corporate, division or plant-wide basis, rather than developing a subcontracting plan for each contract. The goal was to determine whether the comprehensive test plan would provide greater opportunity for small businesses.

Chapman said the DOD's use of FOIA exemptions to withhold information on the program has made it very difficult to evaluate if the program is meeting small business goals.

Chapman sued Sikorsky Aircraft and the DOD to gain release of Sikorsky's small business subcontracting plan. He won the case in court in 2014 but Sikorsky and DOD successfully appealed, and the case was sent back to the lower court.

In the latest development, a

California judge approved an agreement between the league and DOD to go to trial to examine whether or not a specific FOIA exemption applies to information that Sikorsky and DOD withheld on Sikorsky's small business subcontracting plan.

U.S. District Court Judge William Alsup of the Northern District of California ordered that the trial would include as many as 10 depositions from DOD on the program.

A spokesman for Sikorsky told GovExec that at this time Sikorsky is no longer a party to the litigation. A DOD spokesman declined to comment, citing a policy of avoiding commenting on pending litigation.

in 1978 requires American-made steel, iron and other goods for federal transportation projects.

Trump's order requires federal agencies to reevaluate the many exemptions that have been granted to ensure that the laws' goals are carried out. The reviews are to be finished by November. There also may be a crackdown on visas for highly-skilled foreign workers.

To date, many waivers and exemptions have been granted, ostensibly when domestic products were not available or too high-priced. Also, under several free trade deals, contractors from 59 countries are treated the same as U.S. companies in federal contracting. In exchange, U.S. companies are on equal footing seeking contracts in those 59 countries.

Reaction to the order has been mixed and it is unclear whether it will have a net positive or negative effect on federal contractors and on American jobs and the economy.

It also is unclear how enthusiastically the order will be carried out, given that federal agency heads are already under pressure to develop major reorganization plans, and to deal with budget delays, a possible shutdown and possibly steep cuts and layoffs.

While some analysts say the order may not have much impact on federal contracts, others are cautioning federal contractors to be absolutely sure they are complying with all Buy American requirements.

The IT Alliance for Public Sector said its members are worried that less flexible rules could mean a loss of access to innovative technologies and increased costs. "Buy American" sounds good and is well-intentioned, but it will only help America if it is applied in a manner that reflects today's reality," the group told Federal Times.

There also has been some griping about the perceived unfairness of the Trump family's companies manufacturing most of their goods overseas.

Column: Untangling Service Contract Act vacation and sick leave requirements

by Nichole Atallah, partner, PilieroMazza PLLC

Complying with Service Contract Act (“SCA”) leave requirements is challenging, even more so if service employees live in a state or county with local sick leave laws or if the contract is subject to Executive Order 13706, Sick Leave for Federal Contractors. Each of these laws and regulations has unique requirements that must be woven together to develop a compliant leave policy.

However, once contractors understand the nuances, strategic policy decisions can be made that minimize costs and liability.

SCA requirements

The SCA requires that a service employee be provided a certain amount of vacation time commensurate with the employee’s years of service on the same or similar contract. The employee is not due any vacation until his or her anniversary date, or the date the employee began work on the same or similar contract, whether as an employee of the current or a predecessor contractor.

On the employee’s anniversary date, the employee is eligible to receive the full amount of vacation time due for the year. The vacation time must be used by or paid out to the employee on or before the next anniversary date, or one year later.

Sick leave

The SCA does not require that any sick leave be provided to employees. However, an employer may choose to provide sick leave as a bona fide benefit and count the value of the sick leave against the health and welfare benefits due, so long as providing sick leave is not otherwise required by law.

In recent years, many states and localities have passed laws requiring employers to provide sick leave to employees, including service employees who work in those jurisdictions. To name a few, California, Washington, D.C., New Jersey, and Montgomery County, Maryland, all require employers to provide sick leave. The laws have many similarities, but also challenge employers with slight differences. Most of these laws contain a designated amount of sick leave to be provided per year and require that employees be eligible to carry over sick leave from one year to the next.

SCA, state & local compliance

To comply with the SCA and state and local leave laws, employers often develop paid-time-off policies that combine sick leave and vacation into one leave bank. A properly drafted paid-time-off policy may solve the problem of having to provide additional sick leave to employees outside of the vacation leave already required by the SCA.

However, employers must ensure that all of the other requirements of the SCA and local law are met, including allowable reasons for sick leave and carry over requirements which may not be allowed under the SCA vacation requirements.

The Department of Labor generally has not required employers to provide additional leave to service employees under most of these laws, often because the requirements of the SCA may be met if the policy and leave accounting procedures are well managed.

However, an employer may still be liable for additional leave if it is unclear whether the policy was administered to satisfy both laws.

Sick leave executive order

Executive order 13706, Sick Leave for Federal Contractors, adds another dimension to leave policy administration. The executive order applies to solicitations issued on or after Jan. 1, 2017.

Although many contractors expected this executive order to be revoked by the Trump Administration, it has not, and may not be, pulled back.

The executive order does not allow contractors to satisfy their sick leave obligations by “double dipping” into the vacation leave already provided by the applicable SCA wage determination. This benefit must be provided in addition to SCA vacation time and any sick leave provided to employees through the health and welfare benefit.

Additionally, because the executive order is phased in by contract, an employer may be required to comply on one contract but not another. Unlike SCA leave, but like many state laws, executive order sick leave must be carried over from one year to the next, up to 56 hours a year, and does not have to be paid out to employees at the end of the contract.

Conclusion

Providing leave to employees can be a significant cost for employers. Contractors who spend the time to analyze their leave requirements and make strategic policy decisions are much better positioned to bid competitively, maximize profit, and maintain compliance.

Although combining sick and vacation time into one paid time off policy has become popular in recent years, contractors should examine whether separating vacation and sick leave into separate leave banks is the best option to comply with all leave requirements. Any policy developed should take into account legal obligations as well as your corporate culture and operational needs.

Legislation to post more federal contract info online

With a goal of fostering more transparency in government procurement, Sens. Claire McCaskill (D-MO) and Jon Tester (D-MT) introduced a bill to require the posting of more information on federal contracts online.

The bill orders that the texts of all contracts and task orders over $150,000 be published in their entirety within 30 days of award.

OSDBUs' website

The "Federal OSDBU Directors Interagency Council" website has gone dark.

Sources told Set-Aside Alert that the council's website was funded from a Defense Dept. account that ran out of funds and was not replenished.

The website used to be a central source of information for small business federal contractors, with Web links to multiple federal agency Offices of Small and Disadvantaged Business Utilization (OSDBUs). The OSDBUs assist with matchmaking, networking and targeting opportunities.

$130B spent on IDIQs

Government agencies spent approximately $130 billion a year on indefinite delivery/indefinite quantity (IDIQ) contracts from 2011-2015, which was about a third of all contract spending, according to a new report from the Government Accountability Office.

The Defense Dept. accounted for 68% of the IDIQ spending over the period.

The Veterans Affairs, Health and Human Services and Homeland Security departments also were heavy users of IDIQs.

About two-thirds of the IDIQ contracts were for services.

There are exclusions for national security, sensitive information, trade secrets and proprietary information, if approved by the awarding officer and agency.

The bill, if approved, could pose risks to federal contractors, according to PilieroMazza PLLC attorneys. The law firm recommends taking steps now to protect against losing trade secrets (<http://goo.gl/SY8noE>).

McMahon on Twitter

Linda McMahon, the new administrator of the Small Business Administration, wasted no time in getting her own account on Twitter.

She published her first tweet from the @SBALinda account on March 1 and has added 123 more tweets since then.

A recent series of tweets with photos showed her preparing to appear in SBA promotional videos.

SBA events go online

The Small Business Administration's annual week of celebration is mostly online this year.

Small business owners are invited to support SBA's National Small Business Week primarily by viewing events online and by participating in Twitter conversations.

A free public event recently was added in Fresno, CA on May 5. Small business owners may register for that event at this link: <https://www.sba.gov/nsbw/events/may-5>

The events begin May 1 with a dinner in Washington, DC for small business awardees. Supporters are invited to watch online in realtime.

On May 2, SBA Administrator Linda McMahon will appear on Facebook Live.

On May 3 and 4, viewers may watch online in realtime as McMahon visits small businesses across the country.
